ATO communication of taxpayer rights to review, investigate and appeal decisions

Introduction

The Inspector-General of Taxation and Taxation Ombudsman (IGTO) has commenced an investigation into the effectiveness of communications of taxpayer rights to review, investigate or appeal decisions made and actions taken by the Australian Taxation Office (ATO). The ATO's communication of taxpayers' rights in relation to an outcome or decision relating to a taxpayer's tax affairs is an important feature of procedural fairness and is consistent with the Taxpayers' Charter.

We understand that there are a range of communication channels through which the ATO may provide information on taxpayers' rights. For example, through the ATO website, social media, other print publications, or verbally by ATO officers when dealing with taxpayers or tax practitioners. However these communications may be general in nature and not specifically tailored to the taxpayer or the decision that has been made and the supporting reasons. In the case of verbal communications, the taxpayer may not be well equipped to consider the options presented in that moment.

Accordingly, this investigation specifically examines the effectiveness (clear expression and complete information) of information presented in ATO written communications that are issued in relation to an ATO decision or action in relation to a taxpayer's tax affairs. For more information on this investigation, you may visit the IGTO's website at www.igt.gov.au.

The survey questions below focus on ATO written communications about actions and decisions of Tax Officials that affect taxpayer interests (for example, an audit finalisation letter). The purpose of this survey is to understand the information that has been provided to taxpayers and their representatives on these taxpayer rights in ATO written communications and the improvements that could be made on the communication and awareness of taxpayers' rights of review.

We expect the survey to take no more than 10 minutes to complete. Thank you for participating in this survey and for sharing your practical and professional experiences and insights.
